. How do I add the program to your list? I am a male. I can get it for free if you need it. In VLC, open the Advanced Options and make sure that "Enable item menu shortcuts" is checked. When you see the little icon of a clock with a gear, press the "up" key to open the item menu and press the "down" key to open the submenu (like a nested menu). In this submenu, you can choose what it should do. I don't remember the exact key you need to press, but it has to be the "down" key again. Sometimes, after you open the submenu, the clock icon will still be there, but you have to press the "up" key again. When you have the submenu open, go to File -> Open Submenu Shortcut, select "Submenu" and save your settings. Now, you can create a keyboard shortcut by going to VLC -> Preferences -> Keyboard Shortcuts, where you can select the shortcut and assign it to a key. When the item menu icon is showing, press the key you want to use, and you should see a submenu pop-up. Press the down key to open the submenu, and then press the up key to close it again. If you don't see a submenu, you'll have to go to Options -> Advanced -> General and make sure "Enable item menu shortcuts" is checked. If you don't see the item menu icon, you're using the wrong video output. Make sure you're using the "Current selection" (the one right next to the word "current") in the upper left corner of the VLC window. You can also press Alt+L to access the menu. I tried that with the video in my profile picture. It is NOT working. I can see it, but when I click it nothing happens. Make sure the video is playing in the VLC window (under the Play button) before you select "Profile picture". If it's not, you'll have to pause the video, then select "Profile picture", then restart the video to make it work. You can also press Alt+L to access the menu. When you're watching the video, make sure the "Show info" button in the bottom right corner is not checked. This will make it show nothing, which might make you think that the image is 82157476af
